A PHILOSOPHER AT 103.

Views of a Man Who Has Reached That Age.

Every boy should marry young. A girl will make a man of him sooner than anything else.
The woman who cannot be managed with kindness is the rarest thing in the world.
These are not gems from the notebook of a college professor, nor the observations of some foreign man of letters come to teach Americans how they live. They are merely a few casual remarks dropped by a man of one hundred and five years more who had not yet lost his grip on the joy of living.
He says he has not theories, no set rules of living; just a few practices that have brought him golden years laden with health and happiness.

His name is Barnet Wollinsky; he lives at No. 288 Thatford avenue, Borough of Brooklyn; he has ninety children and grandchildren scattered over the greater city, and with tea and coffee made after his own recipes and a bowl of his favorite tobacco at hand, he looks the picture of content. Little it matters to Patriarch Barnet Wollinsky whether kingdoms rise or wane, Wall street turns panicky or firm; his days of abiding, planning and scheming, are past.

Barnet Wollinsky, undoubtedly the oldest man in New York, has no record of his birth. He was born in Kobrine, State of Grodno, in Russian Poland. He figures the date of his birth at 1802, because at the age of ten he saw Napoleon in Moscow. That glimpse of the mighty little emperor marked the first era in Barnet Wollinsky's life. And an eventful life has been his.

The second era was marked by his marriage at twenty-one and his removal to Horluwitsch, Russia, where he spent the greater part of his busy life, becoming one of the richest and most influential men of the community. He owned several large and productive farms and was the proprietor of three profitable taverns. With his temporal affairs running smoothly he turned his attention to study and eventually became a rabbi. With the first uprising against the Jews in Russia, Rabbi Wollinsky became the victim of religious frenzy. His farms and taverns were confiscated, his first wife died after begging him not to attempt to reclaim his lands nor to struggle in his old age to secure a new footing in the land of his bitter foes, and his gray head was bowed in sorrow. In America he had both children and grandchildren. Perhaps there he could start afresh.

Think of starting afresh after you have passed the allotted three score years and ten! But that is just what Barnet Wollinsky determined to do, and he started out by marrying again. With his newly acquired wife and hope throbbing in his heart he set sail for America, arriving in New York twenty-two years ago.

True in his determination he invested the remnants of his once great fortune in a small business which grew and flourished despite the competition of younger men with the patriarch's older methods. He declined all invitations of children and grandchildren to share their homes until a year ago, when his second wife died, and he broke up their pleasant little home to join the family of his eldest son, Max, who lives at No. 288 Thatford avenue, East New York.

And there you can find him any day, any evening; but make your coming call early, for Barnet Wollinsky is no midnight reverter. He will offer you a brew of his favorite coffee, a sip of his favorite wine, and a filling of his choicest tobacco. He will talk to you in any one of six languages. He will give you interesting data regarding Poland, America and his racial relations. He will answer questions in English while he writes a letter to one of his children in Russian. He will read the English or French paper with the aid of glasses. He will make you laugh at his merry quips and think over his wise philosophy and, above all things, he will make you wonder why one cannot live to pass the century mark and retain all their faculties.

And his answer to such a question will be, "Live the simple life. I have no theories. I never thought about what would hurt me; what would overtake me. I have not fasted myself as to food. I always went to bed when I felt like it. I was with the sun. Now I am often up at 3 o'clock. I can drink two cups of tea a day and believe I do not tobacco in any form except cigarettes. I have eaten fruit, vegetables, meat and pastry as I have desired them, and indigestion is something I have never known. I never smoked until I had acquired my present growth, and I do not think that any man should.

For women, to whom we must look for the home life which make a nation great, I have always had the most profound, the greatest respect. In my time I married two of the finest women in the world. One belonged to one generation, the other to the succeeding generation. No matter when or where they live, women are about the same the world over. They appreciate kindness as does no other living thing. The woman who cannot be managed by kindness is the rarest thing in the world.

The greatest good that women do the world over is to influence men for good.

With which world-old bit of wisdom, Mr. Wollinsky lighted a fresh bowl of tobacco in a pipe half a century old and leaned back in his chair to reflect.

Making Precious Stones.

After describing how diamonds may be made by the employment of tremendous pressure, Henry Smith Williams in an article on modern chemistry in "Everybody's" says: "It would be futile to predict how soon diamonds of marketable size may be reduced, but in the meantime the similar problem of manufacturing relatively large gems of other kinds—rubies, sapphires, emeralds, the Oriental amethyst, and the Oriental topaz—has yielded its full secret to science.

Just as the brilliant diamond is only a particular state of so familiar and inexpensive substance as carbon, so these sister gems—some of them even exceeding the diamond in value—weight for weight—are merely crystalline forms of the clayey earth, alumina—a compound of aluminum and oxygen.

If no coloring matter is present this crystal is called a white sapphire. Usually, however, a trace of some chromium or cobalt salt is found, and then the gem becomes a true sapphire, a ruby, an amethyst, an emerald, or a topaz, according to color.

Gems of the true sapphire order are manufactured by bringing alumina to a liquid state, through the agency of extreme heat; the gem crystallizes from the solution on cooling.

Unfortunately the gem thus formed breaks into fragments when touched; but the fragments are still of marketable size; and true rubies and emeralds thus manufactured have now entered the field of commerce.

Bohemian Paper Run By Women.

The Zenske Listy, a newspaper printed in the Bohemian tongue, recently made its first bow to the public in Chicago. It is published exclusively by women. Mrs. Bessie Parlik is the editor. Mrs. Milly R. Hilna and Mrs. Rose A. Kabal are the publishers. Every scrap of the work, typesetting, printing and all soliciting of advertisements and subscriptions, is done by women. It is reported to have already a circulation of 6,000.

The daily consumption of pens is 3,500,000.

THE SCHOOL FOR SAVINGS

SUMMER BOWS AND TIES—What a variety we are showing! Merry widow bows, large lawn bows, small embroidered bows, Windsor ties for embroidered collars, jabots, stocks; etc. All constitute new clean up-to-date stock. Small dainty lace bows to fasten on collars, etc. formerly 25c; we are quoting today at 10c. Large Merry Widow bows formerly 50c, now 35c. Some of these bows are plain white tipped with stripes of pink, blue and lavender. Be sure to see the dainty mull ties made of soft "Fragerie" mull with points of Baby Irish lace.

WHITE LINONETTE SKIRTS

This modern article of dress makes the summer girl toilette complete. Made of good wearing material, very washable, satisfactorily tailored. We have them in all sizes and lengths at the low price of $1.25.

LONG SILK GLOVES—The most worn dress accessory in the history of fashion, exceptionally dressy and a finish to any costume. We have all the latest shades, Copenhagen, golden brown, tan, navy blue; champagne and gray. These gloves sell everywhere at $2.00 and $2.25. We name the extraordinarily low price of $1.75. These are of the Kayser sixteen button, double tipped, mosquito style. A special lot of 16-button black and white silk gloves, $1.25 value at 98 cents.

WIRE HAIR CROWNS

It is hard to dress the hair comfortable in summer, but with the aid of the new wire hair crown it is an easy task, as it is very durable, light and airy. You can hardly feel it on your head. On sale at the hair goods counter at 25 c and 50 c.

TALCUM POWDER

Who can do without this modern toilet necessity? You can buy it at the druggist's, of course, say at 25c, and then how quickly it is used up. Why not buy "Air Float" Talcum Powder, very absorbent and feels cool and delightful on the skin. We quote this very desirable preparation at the low price of 12 cents. In other words you can get two cans for the ordinary price of one.

SIGNATURES OF A CABINET

Bonaparte, Wilson and Straus, Write Plainly—Others Like Cashiers.

Nearly every one is familiar with the pictures of the members of the Cabinet of President Roosevelt, but how few persons there are that ever saw the handwriting of the men. Here are reproduced the signatures of these nine: Secretaries Root, Cortelyou, Taft, Meyer, Bonaparte, Metcalf, Garfield, Wilson and Straus.

Messrs. Bonaparte, Wilson and Straus write their names so that he who runs may read. Write Messrs. Cortelyou, Meyer and Metcalf try the bank cashier style a trifle. I. e. write their names so that it is difficult to read them. Oscar S. Straus writes a very pretty signature, which some would call a vertical hand. James R. Garfield puts in his mother's maiden name, Rudolph.

Every one of them writes a better hand than does the President, and Charles Warren Fairbanks, who writes a plain round hand, will probably be considered the best of all.

Get Their Living by Dying.
"In China, dear friends," said the absent-minded missionary, "human life is regarded as of but slight value. Indeed, if a wealthy Chinese is condemned to death he can easily hire another to die for him; and I believe many poor fellows get their living by thus acting as substitutes."
